BELIEVE BIEVENOUR COMMITTED SUICIDE

Joseph Bievenour, who was buried in the Catholic cemetery at Paradise last Saturday morning, committed suicide at the York county home last Wednesday, it is believed. An investigation disclosed that he shot himself with a shotgun while cleaning the directors' room. It is not known whether or not the shooting was accidental or was done with suicidal intent. Bievenour was an inmate at the institution for the past six years. He was 62 years old.

Bievenour had been engaged in assisting in the work of cleaning up the executive offices in the almshouse in recent years. It was customary for him to have the office and meeting room cleaned before officials, who reside at the institution, began their day's work. It was known that the man had for years been afflicted with epilepsy. At times the man had such serious attacks that he was unconscious for five and ten minutes before he fully recovered his faculties.

On last Wednesday morning, says The York Dispatch, Bievenour went to the meeting room of the directors of the poor and was engaged in cleaning the furniture and floors when a loud noise was heard by employed officials. Believing that Bievenour had fallen to the floor as the result of one of his attacks no attention was paid, according to that paper. When no one heard the man moving about a few minutes later an investigation was made and Bievenour was found lying in a crouched position on the floor. Thinking the man was seriously stricken, an effort was made to straighten him out when a shot gun, which had been kept in the room, fell from under his body.

The gun, it is claimed, has not been in use for many years and was not loaded. Just how the man secured a shell could not be ascertained. It is said that Bievenour, after he loaded the gun, placed the one end on the floor and the barrel against his abdomen. It is believed he was in a crouched position when he pulled the trigger.

CHARGED WITH OPERATING MOTOR CAR WHILE DRUNK

Charged with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of liquor, Curtis A. Weaver, York, and Joseph McMaster, formerly of Bonneauville, were arrested Monday by Detective White, on information brot before Alderman Keech by Charles M. Little, York. Weaver entered bail for his appearance at a hearing while McMaster was committed to jail. The arrests were the sequel to a smashup between automobiles driven by Little and Weaver, which occurred Sunday evening on the Lincoln highway about seven miles west of York. Following the accident the drivers of the machines engaged in an altercation, and only the timely interference of Deputy Sheriff Kuehn, who came to the scene shortly afterward, prevented bodily harm being done. The officer took the men to York. The men, alleged to have been drunk at the time, were uninjured.

According to reports, Cleo Smith, of Newcastle, Ind., in a big touring car was driving toward Harrisburg and near the brow of the hill in Heidelbergersburg attempted to pass another machine going in the same direction. As he was in the act of doing so, the light car driven by Rentzel appeared over the crest of the grade, traveling toward Gettysburg. Both drivers attempted to pass without colliding, but failed. Mrs. Rentzel, was severely cut by flying glass and was rushed to the Warner Hospital.

The Eddie Plank Garage, Gettysburg, took charge of both cars. They are badly damaged. The Rentzel car had been driven only 200 miles, but the owner sold it to a mechanic at the garage for $65 after the accident. Smith, according to reports, assumed all blame for the accident and offered to purchase Rentzel a new machine.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

MORE CHARITY

EVEN though we openly declare that we are mere dependents on one another, there are times in our lives when our moods are so monstrously ugly that we view the matter in quite a different light.

About our worthy selves, our qualifications and special privileges, there can be no question.

We stand upon a pedestal of our own making, sure of its unsullied magnificence and enduring strength. Being vigorously rational, we are on speaking terms with our neighbors, but we have little time at our disposal to cultivate their friendship for which in truth we do not care.

So with a self-made rule, a questionable scale, a curiously contrived level and plum line, we proceed to measure and to determine their worthiness.

There is a fascination in the exacting performance of such work that appeals to our nature. Every blemish we discover gives us a thrill and adds another tale to our precious store of gossip.

The habitual equivocator and the truthful fellow, the laborer and the capitalist, the quibbler and scientist must be weighed and apportioned with punctilious regularity, so that in the morning we may sip our coffee with customary complacency.

To step upon the scale ourselves is unthinkable, but to insist that others shall do so is a devious obligation which must be discharged without failure.

Our manicured hand must not touch the calloused palm of the blacksmith; our daughters must not marry poor men, nor must we be censured for falsifying our hearts. We are the elect.

In any movement for the public weal, we prefer to pull alone rather than with the commonalty.

Our ideas are so bound up with the one master-thought of self, we cannot think of co-operating with our neighbors; it is not at all agreeable to our uncharitable souls.

To this prevalent selfishness of ours may be assigned the present wretched condition of the world.

There is no clearly defined inclination to pull together; no charitable, nobly planned purpose to join hands in friendliness, and step out from semi-darkness into the light of heaven aflame with saving faith.

The young lady across the way says the war has been over for more than four years and in her opinion the time has come for the government to grant espionage to the poor misguided men who were thrown into prison under the amnesty law.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

DUCKS' PARTY

"Quack, quack," said Mrs. Duck.
"Quack, quack," said Miss Duck.
"Quack, quack," said Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

"Quack, quack," said Miss Indian Runner Duck.

And all the little ducklings said:
"Quack, quack, quack, quack."
Then Mrs. Duck said:

"Quack, quack, we are going to give a party. I am giving it in honor of my young daughter, Daisy Duck. She is such a perfect duck! Such a perfect duck! And I want to give her a party."

"It will be a swimming party."

"Quack, quack, oh dear," said Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

"Quack, quack, oh dear," said Miss Indian Runner Duck.

"You know I'm not very fond of the water," said Mrs. Indian Runner Duck.

"In fact," she added, "I don't like the water. And I don't believe I'll enjoy your party. In fact, I'm not sure but that I have another invitation on that day and wouldn't be able to accept your very kind thought of me."

Mrs. Indian Runner Duck felt that perhaps she had not been very polite and tried to make the last of her speech sound better than the first.

"Oh," said Mrs. Duck, "I really hadn't finished explaining about my party."

"It will be a swimming party at first for all those who care about swimming but after that it will be a barnyard party."

"We will have all sorts of fun and we will finish off with a splendid dinner."

"I plan to have many different kinds of games played and I thought we'd have a parade which would be a great deal of fun."

"Parades are always amusing."

"Our parade could be called the Ducks' Waddling Parade and we could sing or quack as we marched along."

"I made up a marching song to sing as we waddled along. I suppose most would say we couldn't sing but no matter, in our quacking way it is singing."

"And besides lots only make a noise who call it singing. So why should not the ducks do the same?"

And all the ducks quacked.

"The truth, quack, quack, the truth. Lots only make a noise and they call their noise singing, so why should not the ducks do the same? Why not, indeed? There is no reason why we should not. So we will. Quack, quack, we will."

And Mrs. Duck said:

"Quack, quack, I am so glad that all of you agree with me."

"Let us hear the song," they all called. So Mrs. Duck recited the marching song and this was it:

"Quack, quack, quack, Behind each other's back. Let us march, march, march! Quack, quack, quack!"

And then she took a breath and began to recite the second verse of the marching song which went like this:

"Quack, quack, quack, Even if grace we lack Let us march, march, march! Quack, quack, quack!"

The ducks all liked that verse and they quack-quacked for all they were worth.

Thus encouraged Mrs. Duck went on:

"Quack, quack, quack, For waddling at least we've a knack, So let's march, march, march, Quack, quack, quack!"

And yet again Mrs. Duck paused and then began once more to let them hear another verse:

"Quack, quack, quack, Let no one step on a tack, As we march, march, march, Quack, quack, quack!"

They all thought this was excellent advice and all said they would be careful not to do anything of this sort.

And then Mrs. Duck made them all practice their kind of singing and quack-quacking and told them more about the coming party and all decided it would be a splendid affair.

And indeed it was beyond even their high hopes.

Monday we went to the zoo, Wednesday I lost a tooth, Thursday was Lily's birthday party, Friday I was sick, yesterday I had my hair cut, and now here I am rushing off to Sunday school."

BELLE ISLE HARD TO REACH

Mariners Dread to Approach It Through Treacherous Bay of Biscay, Owing to Swift Currents.

Belle Isle is a rocky islet jutting out of the Bay of Biscay off the Brittany coast. While Belle Isle is but ten miles from shore, the water is so rough that few people care to risk the passage. The Bay of Biscay has always been the dread of mariners because of the high tides, fierce currents and dangerous reefs.

Belle Isle was inhabited from early times, for the remains of rock structures made by the Druids are numerous. Later, the Romans occupied it as an outpost of their empire. Then it was held for a long period by a Catholic monastery. In 1761 the British captured the island, after a long siege, but it went back to France soon after. Napoleon started to fortify Belle Isle, but never finished the job. Dumas, in "The Three Musketeers," tells how the gigantic Porthos labored with the great rocks used for the earlier foundations.

How He Came In.
"I'm right proud of my son at college. He's one of the most popular young fellows there," said Farmer Hicks proudly.

"You don't say so?" exclaimed a neighbor.

"Yep; he recently gave a big dinner-dance in my honor at one of the most fashionable hotels."

"Wuz you there?"

"No, I wuzn't."

"Wal, where do you come in?"

"I paid for it."

CAPTAINS OF ADVENTURE

By ROGER POCOCK

THE CORSAIRS A. D. 1534

In 1453 Constantinople was besieged and stormed by the Turks, the Christian emperor, fell with sixty thousand of his men in battle, and the Caliph Mahomet II raised the standard of Islam over the last ruins of the Roman empire.

Four years later a sailorman, a Christian from the Balkan States, turned Moslem and was banished from the city. He married a Christian widow in Mitylene and raised two sons to his trade. At a very tender age, Urui, the elder son, went into business as a pirate, and on his maiden cruise was chased and captured by a galley of the Knights of Saint John who threw him into the hold to be a slave at the oars. That night a slave upon the nearest oarbench disturbed the crew by groaning, and to keep him quiet was thrown overboard. Not liking his situation or prospects, Urui, slipped his shackles, crept out and swam ashore.

On his next voyage, being still extremely young, he was captured and swam ashore again. Then the sultan's brother fitted him out as a corsair at the cost of five thousand ducats, to be paid by the basha of Egypt, and so, thanks to this act of princely generosity, Urui was able to open a general practice. His young brother Khizr, also a pirate, joined him; the firm was protected by the sultan of Tunis who got a commission of twenty per cent on the loot; and being steady, industrious and thrifty, by strict application to business, they made a reputation throughout the Middle Sea. Indeed the Grand Turk bestowed upon Khizr the title "Protector of Religion," a distinction never granted before or since to any professional robber.

Once after a bitter hard fight the brothers captured a first-rate ship of war, the Galley of Naples, and six lady passengers, besides three hundred men were marched ashore into slavery. "See," said the sultan of Tunis, "how Heaven recompenses the brave!" Urui, by the way, was laid up some months for repairs, and in his next engagement, a silly attack on a fortress, happened to lose an arm as part of his recompense.

By this time the brothers were weary of that 20 per cent commission to the unctuous sultan of Tunis, and by way of cheating him, took to besieging fortresses, or sacking towns, Christian or Moslem as the case might be, until they had base camps of their own. Urui as king of Tiemen, and Khizr as king of Algiers. Then Urui fell in battle, and Khizr Barbarossa began to do business as a wholesale pirate with a branch kingdom of Tunis, and fleets to destroy all commerce, to wreck and burn settlements of the Christian powers until he had command of the sea as a first-class nuisance.

The gentle Moors, most civilized of peoples, expelled from Spain (1493) by the callous ill-faith of Ferdinand and Isabella, and stranded upon North Africa to starve, manned Barbarossa's fleets for a bloody vengeance upon Christian Europe. Then Charles V brought the strength of Spain, Germany and Italy to bear in an expedition against Barbarossa, but his fleet was wrecked by a storm, clear proof that Allah had taken sides with the strong pirate king. Barbarossa then despatched his lieutenant Hassan to ravage the coast of Valencia.

It was upon this venture that Hassan met a transport merchantman with a hundred veteran Spanish infantry, too strong to attack; so when this lieutenant returned to Algiers deep-laden with spoil and captives from his raid, he found King Barbarossa far from pleased. The prisoners were butchered, and Hassan was flogged in public for having shirked an engagement. That is why Hassan joined with Venalendi, a brother officer who was also in disgrace, and together they drove Barbarossa out of Algeria. Presently the king came back with a whole fleet of his fellow corsairs, brother craftsmen, the Jew, and Hunt-the-Devil, Salarez and Tabas, all moved to grief and rage by the tears of a sorely ill-treated hero. With the aid of sixty captive Spanish soldiers, who won their freedom, they captured Algiers, wiped out the mutineers, and indeed the most perfect harmony. Instead, by way of proof that there really was no trouble among the corsairs, King Barbarossa sent off Hunt-the-Devil with seventeen ships to burn Spain. Ever in blood and tears, their homes in flames, their women ravished, their very children enslaved, the Spaniards had to pay for breaking faith with the Moors of Granada.

Barbarossa was not yet altogether king of Algiers. For twenty years the Penon, a fortress fronting that city, had been held by Martin de Vargas and his garrison. Worn out with disease and famine these Spaniards now fought Barbarossa to the last breath, but their walls went down in ruin, the breach was stormed, and all were put to the sword. De Vargas, taken prisoner, demanded the death of a Spaniard who had betrayed him. The traitor was promptly beheaded, but Barbarossa turned upon De Vargas. "You and yours," he said, "have caused me too much trouble. So De Vargas fell.

Terrible was the rage of Charles V, emperor of half of Europe, thus defied and insulted by the atrocious corsair. It was then that he engaged the services of Andrea Doria, the greatest Christian admiral of that age, for war against Barbarossa. And at the same time the commander of the faithful, Suleiman the Magnificent, sent for King Barbarossa to command the Turkish fleet.

He came, with gifts for the calif: two hundred women bearing presents of gold or silver; one hundred camels laden with silks and gold; then lions and other strange beasts; and more loads of brocade, or rich garments, all in procession through Constantinople, preceding the pirate king on his road to the palace. The sultan gave him not only a big fleet, but also vice-regal powers to make war or peace. Next summer (1534) eleven thousand Christian slaves, and a long procession of ships loaded with the plunder of smoking Italy were sent to the Golden Horn. Incidentally, Barbarossa seized the kingdom of Tunis for himself, and slaughtered three thousand of the faithful, just to encourage the rest.

It was to avenge the banished king Hassan, and these poor slaughtered citizens, that the Emperor Charles V, attended by his admiral, Andrea Doria, came with an army and a mighty fleet to Tunis.

He drove out Barbarossa, a penniless, discredited fugitive; and his soldiers slaughtered thirty thousand citizens of Tunis to console them for the pirate's late atrocities.

Poor old Barbarossa, past seventy years of age, had lost a horde of fifty thousand men, his kingdom of Tunis, fleet and arsenal; but he still had fifteen galleys left at Bonn, his kingdom of Algiers to fall back upon, and his Moorish seamen, who had no trade to win them honest bread except as pirates. "Cheer up," said he, to these broken, starved men, and after a little holiday they sacked the Balearic Isles, taking five thousand, seven hundred slaves, and any amount of shipping. Then came the building of a Turkish fleet; and with one hundred twenty sail, Barbarossa went to his last culminating triumph, the defeat of Andrea Doria, who had at Prevesa one hundred ninety-five ships, sixty thousand men and two thousand, five hundred and ninety-four guns. With that victory he retired, and after eight years of peace he died in his bed, full of years and honors. For centuries to come all Turkish ships saluted with their guns, and dipped their colors whenever they passed the grave of the King of the Sea.

CARGO TRAMP SHIPS DREAD

No One on Ship Carrying Case Oil Can Tell When He Must Take to the Boats.

A cargo that few tramp steamer skippers care to carry is one of case oil—petrol and paraffin—in five-gallon cans, packed in cases of three.

Our tramp steamer, having loaded this dangerous cargo at New York, says a tramp skipper, we will say, goes on her way to Australia. She encounters fine weather, and all is well. Then, perhaps, one afternoon when the steward is giving the second mate his afternoon tea and toast on the bridge at six bells, a light haze of smoke rises from one of the bunker ventilators.

In the twinkling of an eye the officer is at the bridge telephone, shouting to the third engineer.

"Sorry to interrupt your siesta, Third, but your thwartship bunker's smoking like a blinkin' volcano!"

The third engineer discovers a fire due to spontaneous combustion in the coal, and he sends up to the deck department for assistance.

Though every effort is made by the half-choking men to direct the solitary hose on the fire, it is soon apparent that it is certain to heat the steel bulkhead between the bunker and the forehold, and ignite the thousands of cases of paraffin stored there! That means "Flash!"

Boats are swung out, and the wireless operator, penned in his little cabin, is frantically sending the S O S to an unresponsive ether, and trying to pack his bag at the same time!

Flames break out of the after end of the fore hatch, and the wooden floor of the saloon sends up little spirals of smoke, which change presently to darting tongues of flame.

The captain, on the bridge, realizing that an explosion may occur at any moment, gives the order: "Get that port lifeboat away, Mr. Mate!" and dashes down to his cabin to get his papers!

Two lifeboats ride together on an oily swell. In the distance is a blazing island that has been a ship. Yes; case oil is a cargo few tramp skippers care to carry!

Alabama Mayor Out With Strong Facts

Judge G. W. Thomason, Mayor of Tarrant City, Alabama, widely known and highly esteemed pioneer citizen, recently gave his unqualified endorsement to the Tanlac treatment.
"Chronic indigestion brought me to the verge of a general breakdown three years ago," said Judge Thomason, "and nothing seemed to afford much relief. I was eating scarcely enough to keep going on, and food stayed in my stomach like a rock, causing pain and extreme nervousness.

Sleep was often impossible, and I gradually weakened so I could hardly attend to my office duties.

"The first bottle of Tanlac improved me wonderfully, and each successive bottle gave added impetus to my returning strength. I felt ten years younger when I finished the sixth bottle a short time later. Tanlac gave me new zest in life that still remains with me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists.

MANY WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

Through the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Two Interesting Cases

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Mrs. Edwards Avoids Operation
Wilson, N. C.—"For about a year I was not able to do anything, not even my housework, because of the pains in my sides and the bearing-down pains. I could only lie around the house. The doctor said nothing but an operation would help me, but I tried different medicines which did no good, until my sister insisted on my trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She said there was nothing like it. I knew that she was right, for I began to improve with the first bottle and it has done me more good than anything else. I am able now to do anything on the farm or in my home, and I recommend it to my friends."—LILLIE EDWARDS, R.F.D. 3, Box 44, Wilson, N. C.

Another Operation Avoided
Akron, Ohio.—"I can never praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I had such pains and weakness that the doctor told me nothing but an operation would help me. But my mother had taken the Vegetable Compound and she told me what it had done for her, and so I took it and I am glad to tell every one that it made me a strong woman, and I have had two children since then."—Mrs. R. G. WESTOVER, 325 Grant Street, Akron, Ohio.

YOUNG HANOVERIAN KILLED

William Hollinger, aged 20, elder son of Postmaster and Mrs. D. Guy Hollinger, Hanover, was fatally injured just before midnight on Saturday, when the car in which he was riding crashed into a truck on the Lincoln Highway, near Mountville. The car was owned by Calvin W. Plowman, Hanover, and driven by his son, Walter, who suffered from slight concussion of the brain. There were three other boys in the car, Randall Mullen, Toronto, Canada; Kirk Moyer, Harrisburg, who is suffering from lacerations, bruises and shock; and Keith Burger, Gettysburg, who escaped with slight injuries. Passing motorists hurried the injured boys to St. Joseph's Hospital, Lancaster, where William Hollinger died Sunday morning, about 40 minutes after the accident occurred. He was conscious but delirious. Death was due to internal hemorrhages. Young Hollinger was identified by his name and address, which was found on his belt. His badly battered watch indicated the exact time of the crash—11:52 p. m.

Walter Plowman claims that as they were driving west on the highway at a moderate rate of speed, they encountered another machine, east-bound, the lights from which car blinded him. Just as this car passed him, Plowman claims, he discovered a large truck parked along the right side of the road. He made an attempt to avoid striking it, but the right side of the car sideswiped the rear of the truck. William Hollinger was riding on the right side in the front seat and Mullen on the same side in the rear seat.

Witnesses allege that there was no light on the rear of the truck and that the driver and a helper were sleeping in the cab. Shortly after the accident the truck pulled away from the scene of the accident. The license number was turned over to Troop E, Lancaster barracks, State Police, who are conducting an investigation.

The boys were returning to Hanover after spending the afternoon at Bethlehem, where they witnessed the Gettysburg-Lehigh gridiron clash. Hollinger, a Sophomore at the college, was a well known baseball player. Plowman is a star pitcher. Both played with New Oxford the past summer.

Walter Plowman, although still suffering from the shock, was brought home by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Plowman.

William Hollinger leaves his parents, two sisters and one brother, at home. The body was brought to Hanover by funeral director W. A. Feiser.

The funeral was held from the Hollinger home on Wednesday afternoon. Young Hollinger's funeral was one of the largest in years. Over 200 Gettysburg college students attended. A memorial service was conducted in Brus Chapel on the Gettysburg college campus yesterday morning by Dr. Henry W. A. Hanson, president of the college. The College R. O. T. C. furnished a firing squad.

Young Mullen's condition yesterday was somewhat improved. At times, he regained consciousness. On one occasion he recognized his mother, who has been a constant watcher at the bedside since her arrival from Toronto on Monday.

The truck which figured in the accident is owned by the York Motor Express company. The name of the driver of the truck could not be learned.

Officials of the motor express company claim that the driver was not asleep in the truck, but that his engine had stalled and he was just alighting from the cab to crank the engine when the crash came. He further claimed that both front and rear lights were burning at the time. Plowman was driving at a high rate of speed at the time of the crash, officials of the company claim. Lancaster county's coroner has pronounced death due to accidental causes.

But the REAL HOME is the one where each partner in it took joy in each piece of the furnishings--where each is eager for something new--something to add more cheerful beauty, more restful comfort--more satisfaction and happiness for the whole family.

It is with a sympathetic realization of all these things that we have gone to every source of supply during the recent months to gather here these delightful collections of EVERYTHING THAT RIGHT HOMES NEED, in the way of floor coverings of every character--draperies, hangers, etc.

We have the furnishings that are wanted--we have the knowledge and experience to help in best selections and to do all the necessary work of putting these things into the homes.

JAS. B. AUMEN HONORED

Edw. E. Beldemaff, of Harrisburg, former lieutenant governor, was elected president of the State Firemen's Association at Reading on Wednesday, in the closing session of the 44th annual convention. The vice presidents chosen included James B.
Aumen, Gettysburg, and Jacob E.
Weaver, York. The Rev. Dr. Samuel
H. Stein, of York, was re-elected chaplain by unanimous vote. The majority voted to go to Erie for the 1924 meeting.

On Wednesday afternoon's train out of Hanover at 4:35 o'clock over the Pennsylvania, an extra coach and baggage car was added for the accommodation of 30 McSherrystown firemen and 28 members of the Mc-Sherrystown band. The Hanover P.
O. S. of A. band played for the Marietta Fire Co. in the parade on Thursday. The Hanover L. drum corps headed the Hanover Fire Co.

News of the election of Mr. A-umen was received in Adams county with much gratification. Mr. Aumen has been fire chief in Gettysburg for the past several years and has been president of the Adams county association since its organization. His ability has brought the Gettysburg company to its best efficiency since it was founded.

The Ford runabout of John H.
Menges, stolen from the open shed of garage in the rear of his premises, in McSherrystown, on Wednesday night, has been recovered—in part.
On Friday the hiring on the Sheppard farm, tenanted by Charles Fuhrman, near Gitt's mill, while going through the woods on the farm discovered the four wheels of the car hidden in the brush. He at once got in touch with Chief Crabbs who took them to Hanover, Mr. Menges identifying them. They were equipped with four practically new tires, from which Mr. Menges had taken the numbers. A short time later the body was discovered in the woods of Tolbert Sterner farther on, minus wheels, horn, spark plugs, differential, radiator and battery. Strong suspicions are held as to the identity of the guilty parties.

An action to recover five acres of land transferred by mistake, according to the allegations of the plaintiff, has been filed in the Adams county court of common pleas by the Eagle Metallic Copper Company, of Allentown, against John Warren, of Hamilton township. The case has been listed by G. Harry Roth, prothonotary, as the first for trial at the November term of court.

James Taylor, of Hanover, an employee of the Hanover Cordage Company, was overcome by a fit of epilepsy Monday afternoon. He was taken to his home.

Stanley B. Stover, of Hanover, has purchased the electrical store of W.
H. Master at Littlestown and took charge of the business on Wednesday.

FARMERS' DAY NEXT THURSDAY

A display of automobiles and farming equipment will be a feature of the Adams County Farm Products show celebration in Gettysburg, according to detailed plans for the event there October 18 as outlined Friday at a meeting of committeemen and members of the Gettysburg C. of C. It was decided by unanimous vote to hold the display in the central part of town instead of at the playground as previously planned after C. B. Dougherty, of the Gettysburg Ice and Cold Storage company, had offered his stables and yards for the display of cattle. Other available plots in the central part of the town will be used for the display of additional live stock. Baltimore street, between the square and Middle street, is to be roped off as concession space for the display of automobiles and any other exhibits approved by the concession committee. The south side of center square will be cleared during the day for exhibits of farm products and fruit and handiwork of the housewives. The committee as a whole adopted a suggestion of G. F. Mitchell, restaurant proprietor, to give away a Ford automobile. Tickets will be given all the merchants participating in the event and distributed to the people in the stores without any strings attached. A list of prizes in cash and merchandise to be offered by the merchants, for the best exhibits is now being prepared by a committee headed by William G. Weaver. Some cups will also be included in the prizes.

Minerva Webster, 7 years old, was killed and 12 persons injured, 5 seriously, when the motor truck in which they were riding was struck by a locomotive on the W. M. R.R. crossing at Glen Morris, Md., on Sunday afternoon. All of the persons on the truck were Baltimoreans. The party was on its way to meet Clell Webster, father of the dead child, who was enroute home from a motor trip to California, when the accident occurred. He arrived at the hospital several minutes before the death of his daughter.

A Chandler racer, driven by Oscar Olsen, Fayette county, was slightly wrecked when it plunged over an embankment on the Lincoln Highway, one mile west of Farmers, after colliding with an Overland coupe, Sunday afternoon. The latter car was driven by Henry Bowersox, of Jacobs' Mills. None of the occupants of the cars was injured. Olsen told those who gathered at the scene of the mix-up that he was a state policeman. He wore civilian clothes.

Charles Sell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sell, of Hanover, sustained slight concussion of the brain and injuries to his thigh and left arm when he was knocked from his motorcycle in an accident in that place Sunday. It is said that he did not have a light on his motorcycle and was struck by an auto, when he tried to pass another car.

In the presence of a large assemblage and with the solemn rites of the Catholic church, the corner-stone of St. Vincent's new Parochial school building, Midway, was laid on Sunday afternoon. The address was delivered by Rev. W. J. O'Callaghan, rector of St. Aloysius church, Littlestown.

Lehigh defeated Gettysburg at Bethlehem on Saturday, 28-6.

EFFORTS MADE TO SCHICK TEST

Efforts are being made by Dr. Eugene Elgin, of East Berlin, county medical director, to bring before parents and guardians the necessity of having children Schick tested before winter and the period of diphtheria sets in. Dr. Elgin points out that the Schick test, which was first tried last fall in Adams county with excellent results, will be administered free of charge to children between the ages of 6 months and 6 years, and for a moderate charge for children over 6. That is necessary is the written consent of the parents or guardians allowing the Schick test to be administered.

The Schick test, it is pointed out, is given children to determine whether or not they have natural immunization to diphtheria. In case the child shows positive reaction to the Schick test, anti-toxin should be administered, which establishes a natural immunity to diphtheria within the patient. Dr. Elgin emphasizes the fact that the Schick test, in itself, does not prevent diphtheria, but rather tests the child's ability to throw off diphtheric germs without contracting the malady. Forms of consent for parents and guardians to sign can be procured from Miss Kate Briel, State nurse, or Dr. Elgin. The family doctor will be given the toxin-antitoxin to administer for the Schick test, those in charge say. A number of parents already have signed the consent slips for the test to their children. Toxin-antitoxin is a harmless fluid, according to Dr. Elgin and in most instances the person inoculated with it feels no bad effects. Diphtheria, according to Dr. Elgin, is the foremost fatal disease in children from 3 to 5 years of age.

WORN NERVES

Nervous troubles, with backache, dizzy spells, queer pains and irregular kidneys, give reason to suspect kidney weakness and to try the remedy that has helped your neighbors. Ask your neighbor.

Mrs. Mary Hanstine, 28 N. Broad St., Waynesboro, Pa., says: "My back pained so severely I couldn't sit still long. When I attempted to rise from bed mornings a dreadful catching pain darted through the small of my back. Steady pains stayed with me all through the day and I was so dizzy I could hardly see. My nerves became unstrung and my kidneys were in a weak condition. I had known of Doan's Kidney Pills and decided to try them. It didn't take Doan's long to do away with all signs of kidney complaint."

C. A. Sterner of the Sterner Cigar Company, Hanover, has sold his cigar factory to Jacob C. Kling. The new owner took possession on Monday. Mr. Sterner conducted this factory for the past 20 years, succeeding Charles Bowman and Sons. Mr. Sterner will devote his time to the automobile business.

The Red Cross drive for Japan relief has reached a total of $2,288.66 or $288 over Adams' quota. The New Oxford M. E. church has sent in an additional sum of $8.00. Grace Lutheran church, Two Taverns, sent $10 more. St. John's Reformed, New Chester, $10 and the Reformed church at Littlestown $93.

Philip R. Fuhrman, Hanover, arrested by Chief Crabbs on September 27th, for passing a street car while discharging passengers, was fined $10. Paul R. Luckenbaugh, who was arrested by Chief Crabbs on Thursday for exceeding the speed limit in Hanover, was fined $5.

Luther Deatrick, Gettysburg, is on a trip to Texas, New Mexico and California, to be gone several months.

ORPHANAGE'S SPLENDID REPORT

Superintendent A. H. Smith at the annual meeting Thursday a week of the board of directors and ladies' auxiliary of the Hoffman Orphanage, told how $3,088 was realized from farm products sold after the home used an abundance of the products. Over $94 was realized from the asparagus alone. The girls of the home have been doing all the cooking and bread baking. This has been done during the past year at a saving of $182.54 over the expense of two years ago when the family was much smaller. No help is employed for housework. Sixty-four have been cared for during the year. Nineteen were admitted and twelve dismissed. Action is now pending on the admission of four children, which will make the total fifty-seven. The only farm product failing them this year was the potato crop. Receipts at the home totaled $28,673. The balance in the treasury on Sept. 21st was $2,893.

One Hanover councilman asserts that automobiles parked on Hanover square are taken advantage of early on Saturday afternoons often by children, to secure positions of vantage from which the owners, walking to the cars later in the afternoon or evening, could sit and view Saturday evenings crowds. Another councilman made assertion that some motorists after securing choice locations went to supper on the street cars, and that very often the same cars could be observed Saturday after Saturday holding the same positions. The matter will be thrashed out later.

With net earnings of $75,000 during its 3 1/2 years of existence, the R. L. Dollings Company of Pennsylvania paid out in dividends to stockholders the sum of $400,000, or more than five times the amount of its net earnings. This was revealed Wednesday in a report which Thomas Raeburn White, as received, presented to the United States district court. The affairs of the Dollings company and its subsidiaries were so confused, the receiver said, that it was impossible for him to render a complete account even in a preliminary way.

The automobile hearse is a "pleasure vehicle." That is the classification given to all undertakers by the State Highway Department. Much confusion has been caused heretofore, as many persons regarded the hearse as truck, but it belongs in the passenger or pleasure vehicle class, and hereafter must be registered as such. Miss Helen Nace, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Allen G. Nace, of Hanover, has been elected a teacher in the public schools of Chambersburg. Miss Nace was formerly a teacher in the Hanover schools and also taught in Adams county.

KILLED FOLLOWING DANCE

Jones Serenaders gave a dance on Thursday evening at Round Top and thereby hangs the story of two auto accidents on the Gettysburg-Harrisburg road the same evening. The first one was to the Craig family traveling from Harrisburg to the dance. At the Cleveland farm north of Gettysburg the car struck an obstruction and ran into a ditch and took fire. The car was destroyed by flames, the occupants escaping without serious injury. After the dance Alfred Palm with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Moore, of Harrisburg, started for the latter place with two other men. Between Heidlersburg and York Springs, Moore, driving the car, struck a culvert and the car was upset and the occupants were hurled to the road. Alfred Palm was picked up by a passing car and taken to the Warner Hospital and was dead when the hospital was reached. The Moores were taken to Harrisburg and are said to have been seriously hurt and are at the Harrisburg Hospital. The other occupants are said to have escaped serious injury.

First steps were taken by Biglerville citizens to organize a strong opposition to the proposed increase in water rents in that borough, at a meeting of the C. of C. on Monday evening. Acts will then be presented to the Public Service Commission and a hearing demanded as to whether or not the rates are warranted.

Father Whalen will do the honors in inviting the assemblage to dinner, and then is going to devote himself as he says to the making of dough to pay for the statue. His book, "The Red Lily of Buchanan Valley," will be the souvenir of the celebration.

VACATIONS

"Yeah, my wife and I have decided that for our vacations she will stay at home and I'll go to the seashore."

"Shucks! You call that a vacation?"

Sure it is. She won't have to get up mornings and cook my breakfast, and I won't have to get up and eat it! Ain't that vacation?"

Stupid Authors.

Hubby—Some novelists don't know what they're talking about. Here's one who speaks of a girl's "raven hair."

Wife—Well, what's wrong with that?

Hubby—Ravens don't have hair; they have feathers!

Overheard by J. C.

Lawyer—Yes, I'm off to Florida for a couple of weeks. Health precaution. Think it best to recharge my storage batteries before they become completely exhausted.

Blunt Friend—That so? I thought you were running on gas.

Slight Misunderstanding.

Said the bank teller to the new girl who was making a deposit: "You didn't foot it up."

"No," she replied innocently, "I took a taxi."

A MISFORTUNE

Eel—Why so gloomy?

Clam—Because I'm a little neck clam and can't get any collars small enough for me, that's why.

Contributed Verse.

These college chaps are very slow. They seem to take their ease; For even when they graduate They do so by degrees.

Whizz, Bang!

Mrs.—Which is the proper word to write, "disillusioned" or "disillusion-ized?"

Mr.—Aw, just write "married."

Quite the Opposite.

"My husband gives me so much a month to spend as I please. Does yours?"

"So much a month? No, so little."

Patience Rewarded.

"That man was a waiter for ten years and now he's worth $1,000,000."

"All for waiting ten years?"

"Yes, his rich uncle died then."

Fair Enough.

Ethel—So Stella is keeping her engagement to Tom a secret!

Clara—Only to Tom!

One Pleasant, the Other Not.

"Lucky in love; unlucky in cards."

"I get you. You hold small hands in both cases."

It Must Have Been Her.

He—I dreamt last night I proposed to the sweetest girl in the world?

She—And what did I answer.

NO RESISTANCE.

He: I can hardly resist kissing you.

She: And I wouldn't resist, so go ahead.

Mary's Busy Hen.

Mary had a little hen. A busy little layer; So Mary bought a dozen more. And made the business pay her.

Certainly Not!

Kind Old Lady—Why don't you make those boys stop fighting?

Small Bystander—Who, me? It took two weeks to get 'em started.—Life.

Lot of 'Em Like That.

Blinks—How are you able to afford to own and run a car?

Jinks—I'll only be able to own and run the darn thing as long as the stores will let me run bills.

A Poet's Bride.

"Cheer up, my dear," urged the poet. "I have had a poem accepted by a prominent magazine."

"Where is the money?"

"They pay on publication."

"Do we eat on that plan?"

Where the Expense Came.

"So you sold your car?"

"Yes; cost too much for repairs."

"Heavy garage bills, eh?"

"No; never got out of order. But I had to pay for repairing the people it ran over."

Artist—I owe my great success to a cow, to be frank with you.

His Friend—Oh, so the picture that made you famous was one portraying a cow?

To Drown Her Out.

"Is your daughter going to practice on the piano this afternoon?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, will you please lend me your lawn mower? I have to do the lawn some time, anyway."

She (indignantly)—You had no business to kiss me!

He (apologetically)—But, hang it all, it wasn't business—it was a pleasure!

TRUE.

Her Dad—Of course, you have heard my daughter sing.

Suitor—Yes, sir; but I should like to have her in spite of that.

"Sympathy, my boy, is made up of just two expressions: 'That's too bad,' and 'I'm very sorry.'"

Doctor Never Treats.

Visitor—How long has Doctor Stansby been treating you?

Patient—The doc never treats once I pay all the bills.

Principles.

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum, "and also by what he won't stand for." —Washington Star.

The Successful Puglist.

Can't Afford Both.

Mrs. Loser—The dentist says I must have some bridge work done.

Husband—Then you'll have to quit bridge playing.

No Profit.

"Why did you stop playing poker?"

"The hours were very trying. Then I had to pay when I lost and my wife collected when I won."

The Question.

"Try one of these cigars, old man; they're the best things out!"

"How are they when they're lighted?" —Pathfinder.

SURE THEY DO!

An international air disarmament conference to stop the present air construction race will be recommended by the American Legion, which will conduct a national referendum to obtain the views of prominent Americans as to the advisability of such a conference.

All members of congress, governors of all states, 1,000 editors, 100 college presidents and a number of prominent citizens will be asked by the Legion to express an opinion on the proposal which would involve the holding of a meeting in Washington, similar to the naval disarmament conference, to be attended by representatives of all leading world powers for the purpose of reaching some agreement as to the number of fighting and observation planes to be maintained by each.

If the opinion of the national leaders is favorable to the Legion's project, President Coolidge will be asked to call an international conference. A necessity for immediate action in the matter of limitation of air armament exists since France took the lead in an air-construction program, and the remaining European powers have entered the mad race to overtake the French. France at the present time has 140 squadrons of the military machines and plans to have 220 at the end of 1925. The planes will carry 75-millimeter cannons and will also be used to transport six machine guns and their crews. The plans include machines which will serve as actual troopships of the air.

England is the nearest competitor, having appropriated $27,500,000 to enlarge her air armada. It has been estimated that by 1926 England will be able to send aloft only 624 battle machines in comparison with France's 1,530 air fighters. Italy and Russia have actively entered the race, the latter planning to have 10,000 planes in operation.

A statement issued recently by National Commander Alvin Owsley calls attention to the fact that naval and land forces have been reduced by national agreement and that the Legion proposes to attempt to obtain similar measures governing aircraft.

"The crying need of the world today is peace—industrial, commercial, economic peace—a restoration from the ravages and horrors of war, a settling down and getting back to the sane pursuits of industry, quietude of heart and mind, to live in safe seclusion away from the covetousness of the invader," the statement reads.

"Can we of the Legion who were their comrades in arms not ask the nations to pause and see what they are doing? Preparedness in a larger sense means a temptation to use that which is being prepared to fight. The wounds of the last titanic trouble are still gaping open; the life blood of the nations is still pouring out because of too much preparedness for battle."

"I propose to the world preparedness for peace—a coming together in a great world conference for the limitation of airplanes for war instead of war to destruction. I challenge the right of any nation to prepare any instrument of destruction and claim the name of defender of world peace. Peace will come when the people of the world will to have peace and express their will in solemn declaration and covenant sealed with honor."

"America is ready to lead the way to secure peace in the air and she has gone far by example to make war impossible on land and sea."

DRAWING CLOSER TO LEGION

Public Is More Interested in Members of Organization, Commander Owsley Believes.

The American public is drawing closer to the American Legion in the opinion of Alvin Owsley, Legion national commander, who has recently completed a speaking tour which carried him into eight states, Cuba and Panama.

"I believe the people are more interested in the question of disabled veterans obtaining ample hospitals and sanatoriums for the sick and wounded than they ever were before," he said. "They are beginning to understand that the first duty of the United States is to care for these defenders."

Commander Owsley said that the stand of the Legion for exclusion of immigrants and in opposition to those who preach radical doctrines had found immediate response.

Other Legion policies which were met with favor by the public, he said, were the stand for a universal draft act, under which capital and labor and all the resources of America would be called for national defense; support of the action of the French and Belgian troops in occupying the Ruhr, and war on profiteers.

Declaring that the Legion members are rising to responsible positions in the state and nation, Commander Owsley pointed out that three governors, four lieutenant-governors, four United States senators and more than thirty members of the lower house in the congress are members of the Legion.

GIFT OF THE DESERT

—12—

"It must have been; the old Mexican camp was south there in that canyon where I told you the cavalymen were waiting tonight. I am beginning to understand what is up—or, at least, suspect what all this may mean. Someone has accidentally stumbled onto this old mine. I don't believe the discoverer could be either Bob or Garcity. But in some way they got wind of it and have taken possession. This munition train, supposed to be headed for Mexico, stops here. Casebeer don't know what's up, and don't care. He gets his money just the same, with less traveling and danger. Maybe he asks no questions; maybe he knows what's up and is in on the deal. Anyway, under orders, he dumps the stuff—powder, dynamite, whatever it is—and hustles it out of sight into that cabin. Before daylight comes his mule train is back again on the desert empty, traveling north."

"And there is nothing you can do, is there?" she asked. "It is no crime to discover and work a mine?"

"No—only, perhaps, that dead man you tell me about; murder is still a crime, even on this border. There is something about this affair which isn't straight; otherwise Garcity and Bob Meager wouldn't be in it. Those guys are playing dirt somehow—it is up to me to find out how."

Kelleen stood up, advancing to the very edge of the flat rock, where he could look straight down into the deep depression below.

"There is no movement down there. Casebeer's outfit is not onto the scheme; after they go that stuff will all be carried into the tunnel. Meager will never dare leave it out yonder."

"What's the place called where the soldiers are?"

"Box canyon—why?"

"I was wondering—"

A sharp spit of fire leaped out of the night beyond the horses, accompanied by a dull report. The startled animals whirled and disappeared in the darkness, but Deborah saw only Kelleen, poised there on the edge of the chasm—saw him fling up both hands, clutching vainly at the air, and then topple over, down into those yawning depths below. She could not even scream, but some irresistible instinct caused her instantly to roll back from off the stone into the slight depression at its base. In the black darkness of this shallow hole she lay motionless, scarcely venturing to breathe. In her fright and daze she yet comprehended all that had occurred; the shot had come not from beneath, but out of the desert. Kelleen had been killed, the horses stampeded; she was unhurt, but alone.

It was all over so quickly the situation barely flashed through her brain, before a voice spoke, a voice familiar and hated.

"By G—d, that got him! Did you see how he toppled plumb over the cliff? That settles his spying on us, I reckon."

"Si, senor; but I would swear there was two of them there."

"You saw two?"

"No; only the one standing against the light, the Senor 'Kid.' I know him; but I thought he spoke, and sure, senor, there were two horses."

"Of course, he stole mine. I had a shot at him then; but there is no one else here. D—n you, look for yourself, Sanchez! This rock is clean as a billiard table, and there's no place to hide. Where the h—l do you suppose those brones went?"

"We find 'em when the day comes; they not go far in the desert, senor. Where the 'Kid' fall—here?"

Deborah realized that the Mexican had clambered onto the flat top of the rock, and was peering down over the edge, while Meager remained on the sand, impatiently moving about.

"Well, what do you see?" he barked finally.

"Not one d—n thing, senor; black like h—l down there—he no live after that."

Meager laughed chucklingly.

"I'll say he couldn't; not even if he was a cat. There ain't no use our hanging round here. That guy is out of the way, and we'll pick him up an-plant him, after these others clear out. Casebeer's outfit must be through by this time. Go on down and start back. You paid him?"

"Si, senor; he never unload till I do; he what you call 'hard-boll.'"

"He's hard-boll, all right, but by G—d, he's got to hold his d—n tongue over this deal! I'll go on down with you and have a final word with him. I'll tell that guy something he'll not forget. Come on; there's nothing more for us to do up here."

The frightened girl, crushed into the shallow hole, half beneath the shadowing rock, dare not stir for some time. The men might decide to return; some dim suspicion might enter their minds, causing them to retrace their steps. She could see nothing, her face pressed hard against the sand, and the sound of the two died away quickly. At last, unable to remain in that posture longer, she cautiously lifted her head and gazed about into the darkness. There was nothing to be seen or heard, and she finally struggled to her feet, clinging to the rock edge for support. It was all plain enough, yet she could not seem to think clearly, and her limbs were so weak they would scarcely support her body. Kelleen had been killed, murdered. Meager had crept up in the dark, and shot the man down in cold blood as he stood silhouetted against that gleam of fire. The victim had toppled over the cliff, and, if not already dead from the bullet, must have been crushed into pulp on the rocks below.

These facts came home more and more visibly to the girl's mind. She had escaped discovery as by a miracle, and yet to what end? She was alone, lost, without either horse or weapon to aid her in escape. Both animals had disappeared in the desert night, her revolver had gone down with Kelleen. But one slender bit of fortune remained—her presence there was still unsuspected. The man whose discovery she had most reason to dread yet believed her back at the ranch, hiding from him behind locked doors, but helpless to escape his return. How she had ever evaded his recognition was a mystery, yet, thank God! she had; and this fact alone gave her a slender chance.

Assured at last that the men had really departed, a measure of strength returning as she moved her limbs and faced the realities, Deborah crept back upon the flat surface of the rock, and gazed frightened into those dizzy depths below. It was like a nightmare, the horrid memory which haunted her of Kelleen's body whirling down through that glare of red light. But by then the light had faded, the distant fire having died down to red ash, and her eyes were unable to penetrate the gloom beneath. She stared into a black void, seeing no movement, hearing no sound. The awful silence and loneliness crushed her spirit.

What could she do? Where could she go? Not to those men there in the valley surely; not to Bob Meager, asking for mercy and release. He was impossible; her bitter hatred of him more intense than ever. To all the wrong done her in the past was added now this brutal murder of Daniel Kelleen—and suddenly, unexpectedly the girl realized what this last meant to her. She refused to acknowledge the truth, fought it back there alone in the darkness, yet it would not be altogether ignored. Daniel Kelleen was dead—gone from out her life forever—and there came into her heart a desire for revenge, a mad impulse to fitly punish the murderer. She longed to become the instrument to prove her loyalty to him by action. Yet how? What was it possible for her to do?

She stared helplessly about into the dense blackness of the desert, and up at the desert stars overhead, her mind obsessed with these questions. It was no longer herself so much as the aroused memory of him. She would carry on his work; she must at whatever cost. But how? The cavalymen stationed at Box canyon! They were waiting for the approach of Casebeer's outfit, or else some word of command from Kelleen. They could not be far away over there—to the south he said, and he had pointed in that direction. The stars would help her to keep the points of the compass until daylight came, and then surely she could discern something else to steer her course by. She must go on foot, straight out into the desert; there might not be one chance in a hundred of her going right—yet the one chance was better than remaining there for Bob Meager to find her. She would rather die miserably in the sand waste than feel that wretch touch her again; God, yes, the kiss of Death would be sweet, compared to the touch of his lips. She shuddered at his thought. His wife! the subject of his foul caresses; helpless to repel his lust, his brutal bestiality. She would make the trail; she would go south. This was all that her mind grasped clearly—the soldiers were camped at Box canyon, and Box canyon was somewhere out there to the southward. To reach them was her only hope.

She stood up and studied the sky. She knew so little of those stars they frightened and confused her in their desert brilliancy, and yet she remembered enough to meet her immediate needs. The Big Dipper was easily found, and then the North Star. She must be right, for Kelleen had pointed over there, and the direction he had designated coincided exactly with what the stars told. She could not go far wrong if she kept that North Star at her back—she would be going south. A moment she paused, hesitating to take the plunge, a prayer on her lips. How lonely, desolate, black the night was; the very silence seemed to hem her in, isolate her from all the world. Then, with firm-set lips, the girl went forward, plunging her way through the sand, instantly swallowed up in the black desert.

She plunged on recklessly, desperately, hope dying within her as she advanced. Nothing could guide her now, or save her, but God's mercy. The soundless void through which she moved, the impenetrable black curtain enveloping her almost drove her mad. She could not fight the depression or keep her mind clear. The sand shifted under her feet and twice she fell heavily, tripped by some protruding rock, and left bruised and breathless. Her advance was blind, uncertain, and she scarcely dared turn her face forward for fear of losing the guidance of that one star by which she endeavored to steer. She was lost utterly, but for that, and when for a moment her eyes strayed everything became confused, her every sense of direction gone. How long she toiled on, how fast her rate of progress, the girl never knew—the way was uneven, with unexpected depressions here and there, and ridges of rock projecting through the sand, and occasionally mounds she had to go around. Once she encountered a shallow ravine, stepping off into it unconsciously, and then crawling painfully up the opposite side, cut by sharp splinters of stone, before attaining the level again. For the moment she lost her star, but finally located it once more, and plunged desperately on.

Then she saw something just ahead of her—a dim, indefinable shadow, which seemed to move. It was so hideous, so grotesque and shapeless, her very heart stood still with terror. The girl sank to her knees, trembling, with no eyes for anything except that mysterious moving object. Misshapen, huge, looming oddly through the gloom, it was advancing steadily toward her—a formless something which resembled neither man nor beast.

CHAPTER XIII

The Border Patrol.

Deborah rose timidly to her feet, her heart beginning to beat once more, but not with fear. Forth from the darkness came the low whinney of a horse in sudden recognition, while as instantly that horrid shadow took both shape and form. It was a horse, saddled, bridled, the rein trailing along the sand, one of the two animals stamped by the shot which had killed Kelleen. He had sensed her coming in the desert night, and was even then dumbly welcoming her. The girl went forward slowly, doubtfully, fearful of again startling the animal into flight, but he remained quiet, sniffing at her as she drew near, and she finally put hand on the dangling rein. It was the horse Kelleen had ridden, and Deborah hid her face in his mane and cried softly, while he turned and rubbed his muzzle against her shoulder in silent greeting. It seemed too good to be true; as though God had led her every step of the way. The sudden reaction left her weak as a child.

Yet she must go on; there was more cause now than ever before to go on—more hope of success. She made the effort twice before she succeeded in dragging herself up into the saddle, but the horse stood patiently, making no attempt to break away. Once there the girl's strength came back, and with it her determination. All was still, deathly still; not a breath of air touched her cheek; the dense night shut them in. Carefully she located the only star she knew; to her mind it seemed utterly wrong in its position, yet she was faithful to it. Half afraid, yet not daring to venture otherwise, she drew the horse about and rode south.

The night seemed endless, the black desert eternal. There were times when the girl lost consciousness of everything, except that shining North Star ever at her back. It was her one guide and hope; through it she retained sanity and faith. In that way lay Box canyon and those waiting troopers. She dare not ride fast, knowing not what pitfalls were ahead, the course irregular, up and down. The horse picked his way intelligently, the reins lying loose, except as she occasionally held him inexorably to the southward. She swayed wearily in the saddle, clinging to the high pommel for support, unable to see, yet aware that they crossed shallow ravines, and found passage occasionally along ridges of outcropping rock, and then advanced more easily for long spaces over wide expanses of sand, noiselessly as a specter. It was hard to keep awake, to concentrate, to remember—she had to struggle to realize this was not all a dream.

Then, after seemingly endless hours, the dawn came. Would she ever again forget it? She hardly knew at first what it was. Riding drowsily with lowered head, she became dimly aware of a change, a lightning of the gloom about, a dull grayness tingling faintly the black wall of the surrounding night. Almost as she wondered the daylight came, wan and spectral at first, widening her vista on a gray circle as the stars slowly faded from out a multicolored sky. To the left a brightening white light shot up in long streamers, touching with more gaudy tinges the edges of fleecy clouds, while in the other direction a purple haze blended with the deeper shadows along the horizon. It was the coming of the sun, rising majestically above the far-off rim of the desert, and she was still moving southward; through the long night hours she had kept the faith.

Yet there was little of hope, of encouragement, in the picture unrolled before her. Her view gradually spread out in wider and wider circle, but with no relief to its drear sameness or monotony. Sand, leagues upon leagues of sand, stretched wherever her wearied eyes turned, leveled by the wind, or cast upward in rounded hillocks, but ever gray, depressing, a sea of desolation, dead, unmovable, extending to the far circle of the overshadowing arch of sky. It was all lifeless, not even a sagebrush or Spanish bayonet visible. Doubts assailed her. Had she taken the right course? Did Kelleen imply that Box canyon lay directly south and had she been led astray, and thus wandered blindly out into the very heart of the desert? Could she, could the horse live through such a day of torture as that rising sun promised? Helpless, hopeless, the girl drooped down wearily in the saddle, closing her eyes to the desolation. They plodded on drowsily.

What Was It Over Yonder?

her mind a chaos, haunted by every memory of horror arising from those swift-occurring events which had led to this tragedy. Her forcible marriage to Bob Meager, the bitter hatred his touch had aroused, his drunken, lustful eyes, the blow she struck him, with murder in her heart, the feeling like a hunted criminal, desperately seeking escape. Then the coming of Kelleen into her life, strangely, mysteriously weaving about her a web of fascination, even as they rode together through the darkness. She had never entirely thrown that off, the odd spell of his presence, his cool, confident words—she felt she never would. Even when she questioned him the most, she still secretly believed; and now that he was actually dead, not so much as the flicker of a doubt remained.

She saw again that dead man in the cave; experienced the grip of those savage arms, and once more, in heedless terror, fired down the black tunnel, and then struggled upward through that awful hole into the light of day. Then all that followed, followed so swiftly, was but a jumble of events, yet each distinct, unforgettable, burned on her soul. True! It could not be true! It must be delirium, a wild fiction of romance raging in the brain of a half-mad dreamer. Yet this was the desert—the desert! She lifted her eyes to look, gazing out blindly over the dull gray expanse. What was it over yonder? a tree? a ridge of uplifted rock? Not much, surely, and yet everything in midst of that solitude. Her heart beat suddenly with hope. Perhaps that was marked the end; perhaps that was where the trail ran—the trail to Box canyon. If so, God was good!

The tired horse lifted his head, and whinnied, breaking into a slow trot, the sand crunching under his hoofs. Deborah was wide awake now, alert and ready. Yet it actually was a tree, and the tops of others began to show beyond; their presence promised water, grass, life; that horrid desert left behind. Yet it was a long, dreary ride of an hour before they reached there, coming to a shallow valley through which trickled a mere rill, rock strewn and almost as desolate as had been the desert itself, but with here and there a patch of grass visible, and a few scattered, wind-racked trees. It was a scene scarcely less dreary than the upper plain, yet to Deborah and her horse was most welcome.

Balata Rubber.

Owing to the constantly increasing demand for India rubber, caused by the use of tires for motor cars and other vehicles, there is more or less a rubber famine, even in normal times. The method of gathering India rubber in tropical countries has been exceedingly wasteful, because the easiest way, that of cutting down the trees, had too frequently been adopted. The search for substitutes has resulted in making known the virtues of a South American tree called the Balata.

Black in Evidence for Fall Dresses

Darker Materials Take an Early Lead in Modes for New Season.

Black frocks predominate in the early fall exhibits, with navy blue as the only close competitor, notes a fashion writer in the Washington Star. Fabrics are unusually interesting, though, and they more than make up for the lack of variety in color tones. Several new satins have made their appearance—soft clinging, crepe-like silks that lend themselves admirably to drapery and pebbly-surfaced satins that are effective in plainer models, with little or no trimming.

Ecru lace is a favored medium for collars and cuffs, while beige georgette and eyelet-embroidered organdie are also popular. Some frocks, fashioned on simple, straight lines, combine two of them. For instance, one attractive model seen was of pebbly black satin, with the bateau neck bordered by a rolled-over collar of openwork beige organdie frilled with several tiers of narrow self-color lace. Gauntlet cuffs of organdie, also edged with lace fluting, added the only other touch of trimming.

One street frock was of navy blue Poirat twill, cut on rather severe tailored lines, and yet trimmed with soft lace frills, which contradicted the tailored effect. It was fashioned in one straight piece, with a rounded neck bordered by a pointed collar and long sleeves molded to fit the wrists like gloves. A jabot of shirred ecru lace drooped from the collar fastening, while lace ruffles bordered the sleeves, half-veiling the hands, and extended

In straight lines up the side of each sleeve, nearly touching the elbows. Green braid, stitched in silver and outlined on one side with a narrow thread of gold braid and on the other with red, outlined both collar and sleeve ends, and also framed the lace

Restful Window Seat Adds Charm to Home

A well-considered window seat has an appeal all its own, says Estelle H. Ries in the Delincentor. In the small house where there is little space for chairs, and in the larger one where bare corners and uninteresting spots are not infrequent, there is good opportunity for this pleasant feature. If there is a bay window, it offers a particularly delightful chance for a window seat where a group of persons may enjoy slight exclusiveness without complete isolation. Here it fits into a space not otherwise used and will give an air of completeness and coziness to the window.

In constructing a window seat, it is preferable, for ease in cleaning, to have its base rest fully upon the floor. If it is raised but a couple of inches, sweeping is awkward and neglect is encouraged. If the window seat does not rest solidly upon the floor, it should be several inches high, so that one may readily reach under it.

One may construct a window seat over a low radiator; it is quite customary to do so. In this case, the wood seat must be lined with tin and asbestos to protect it and also to throw the heat into the room, the tin having a curved back and thus acting as a heat reflector.

In these days when one is likely to put a dance record on the phonograph, pick up the rug and "be off," window seats are particularly desirable. Those who do not participate in the frolic will be more comfortable in a good window seat than in a chair that is constantly being run into even in spite of the best intentions.

Unusually Plain But Striking Jacquette frills at the side of each sleeve. Additional strips of the three-tone braid were applied over each hip in a conventional pattern and extended the length of the skirt at each side, forming pseudo-panels. Three long tassels of dark blue silk dangled from the braid outlines on the hips, adding the finishing touches to the model.

Dainty Ribbon Rose Bag Is Easy to Make

Every woman wants a dainty and distinctive bag to carry with her pretty frocks. Here is one of the daintiest and easiest that can be made. For the foundation cut two circles of buckram and cover with silk of the same color as the ribbon you intend using. Use four or six yards of ribbon according to the size of bag desired. Tack the end of the ribbon to the center of the circle, then twist it and swirl it around in circles until the entire foundation is covered. Pins will have to be used to hold the ribbon in place until the foundation is covered; then the ribbon is tacked and the pins removed. When the two circles have been thus covered they are joined together with the same ribbon. This makes a rose bag similar to a double cockade, and should be swung over the arm.

Hand Knit Frocks Are Chic for Sports Wear

Hand-knit sports frocks for madame and mademoiselle are among the smart knitted garments worn by women who dress well. But if a woman can wield a knitting needle, she can have the same frock at much less cost.

Some of the frocks are made in one piece, with low V-neck and plain stocking stitch for three-quarters of the way, and in squares or plaids, as you will, of the knit and purl combination. The skirt ends with a plain hem effect in the stocking stitch. Others are two-piece. Yellow, tan, beige, powder blue, green and white, in one tone or with another color combined, are used for these frocks.

The softest yarns should be used. Some of the frocks are embroidered in Angora or brush wool, and still others are trimmed with worsted yarn flowers or conventional designs which are applied on.

Draped Fall Hats.
Many of the early fall hats are draped on the lines of a tam. A very pretty model of black velvet is embroidered in white silk. The design is large leaves in outline stitch.

And after the dance, if one has light refreshments in the dining room and more guests than one can comfortably accommodate at table, the dining room window seat pleasantly offers itself.

It is possible to upholster a window seat in cretonne or other material in harmony with the rest of the room. This is not essential, except as a matter of personal preference, as window seats may be had in stock designs with excellent wood finish in styles to harmonize with the character of the room. The use of bright colored cushions and upholstered seats, however, is undoubtedly a large factor in the charm of the room and gives a verve that immediately attracts attention. The best kind of upholstery work and a good grade of stuffing is most essential to make the seat cushions comfortable.

Hide Your Waistline When Wearing Sweater

Many women find that the most beautiful sweater does not look well worn over a skirt, because the waistline of the skirt breaks the attractive appearance of the sweater by beginning a space of another color from that showing through the upper part. To overcome this unattractive feature, wear a slip the length of the sweater in place of the corset cover-brassiere or shorter undergarment. The slip can be made loose or tight like a brassiere, but it should be worn over the skirt, covering the waistline, and should reach to within half an inch of the bottom of the sweater. When sleeveless slippers are worn over blouses, the blouse should be worn outside the skirt.

YORK CONVICTS ATTEMPT ESCAPE

Through the vigilance of Serg. Stillwell, of the State Police, a general delivery of the prisoners confined in the York county jail was frustrated, late Friday night. The escape of a large number of prisoners was conceived by a number of the convicts sent there from the Eastern penitentiary. The entire fifty might have escaped. A detail of state troopers were rushed to York from Lancaster to assist the four troopers and Turnkey Immell in handling the latest developments of the situation, and to ferret out the ones guilty of the attempt to escape.

Two murderers, with heavy sentences hanging over their heads, were involved in the attempt. A hole about 12 by 16 inches had been cut in the cement floor of a cell on the fourth floor. From a cell of a tier on the third floor several convicts had crawled through this hole into the upper cell, when Serg. Stillwell appeared on the scene, covered the prisoners already through the opening who threw up their hands. "It's no use. You've got us," they said.

Another man was working his way through the opening and, as the sergeant covered him with his gun and invited him to come further and take the consequences, he dropped back into the lower cell. Right around the corner from the cell which the men had entered on the fourth floor is a window. Through this window which had been tampered with, it is presumed the prisoners intended to climb down the outside of the jail and then on to liberty.

Major Lynn Adams, head of Pennsylvania State police, and Daniel Buckley, director of the bureau of restoration, State Welfare department, were weekend visitors at the York county jail.

Judge Gordon, of Philadelphia, on Tuesday signed orders affecting the transfer of more than 100 prisoners, now incarcerated in the York county jail and the Eastern State Penitentiary. Under the orders signed by Judge Gordon, 37 of the 50 convicts now in the York county jail were ordered returned to the penitentiary in recognition of the request of the York county commissioners that they be allowed to care for their own prisoners, rather than for long-term or dangerous criminals sentenced from other parts of the state. Twenty-one prisoners sent from the York county jail to the penitentiary were also ordered back to their former quarters. Several of the prisoners now at York will remain.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Adams County Firemen's Association was held Monday at Arendtsville. Committees were appointed to get the following towns interested in the association before the next quarterly meeting which will be held in New Oxford in January: New Oxford, Abbotstown, Bonneauville, Cashtown and Aspers.
